1ii) Difference between Phone and Walk-in interview.

Phone interviews are generally conducted by hiring managers in an effort to save time and quickly eliminate candidates who do not meet the organization's requirements. The aim of a phone interview is not necessarily to identify the strongest candidates but to eliminate the weakest ones. Given that a single open job can attract hundreds of resumes, it is understandable why employers want to screen candidates as efficiently as possible over the phone. According to the experts at Algrim.co, telephone interviews are an integral part of business practices today. Some companies require only one telephone interview while others might request two or three depending on the situation.

Walk-in-interview are formal meeting that happen in person between the hiring manager and the candidate. They are often more in depth than telephone interview. In-person interview enable hiring manager to better evaluate a candidate's attitude and preferences, as well as assess vital non-verbal cues.

You want to give the best answers for each interview question, but sometimes your first attempt isn't as good as you'd like it to be. The good news is that in-person interviews question. Because these conversations go deeper than phone interviews, you usually have the chance to build on your answers and even ask your own clarifying question, if necessary.

Ans 5² As increasing graduation rates and levels of education attainment will accomplish little if students do not learn something of lasting value. Yes federal efforts over the last several years have focused much more on increasing the number of students who go to college than on improving the education they receive once they get there.

Some Immediate Improvement

Creating a teaching faculty:- The seeds of such a change already exist through the proliferation of instructors who are not on the tenure track but are hired on a year to year basis or a somewhat longer term to teach basic undergraduate courses.

Rethinking the undergraduate curriculum:- The familiar division into fields of concentration electives and general education leaves too little room for students to pursue all of the objectives that professors themselves deem important for a well rounded college education.

Improving graduate education:- Aspiring college instructors also need to know much more now in also teach effectively a large and increasing body of useful knowledge has accumulated about learning and pedagogy.

The ~~an~~ need for Research.

Finally, there is an urgent need for more and better research both to improve the quality of undergraduate education at the Study Centre and to increase the number of Students who complete their Studies.
